One of the most heated debates on AT came about when we asked you all about how you felt about televisions in the bedroom. Personally, we prefer to rest, relax and...ahem...wrastle...than invite the living room into our restful corner of the apartment. But we understand the appeal of kickin' back to reruns of Arrested Development in the comfort of your jammies without leaving the warmth of the bed. We'd definitely be one to postpone ever leaving our beds if we were fortunate enough to be able to afford Karim Rashid's newest bed design, The Sphere...

"Democratic designs to the masses" meets luxury for our *sses with the Hollandia International's Sphere bed, a plush cocoon sleep solution that includes amenities such as a 32" LCD screen with optional 5.1 surround sound, a LED florescent canopy-top lighting system, a vanity mirror on the exterior back (to reveal your bed head from staying in it so long), a dual angle customizable mattress with a massage unit built-in, and custom colours and fabrics to match the bed to whatever decor you're ignoring since entering your pod 'o relaxation. There's even a champagne bottle holder on the side to celebrate the fact you're insanely rich and experiencing the sort of luxury last enjoyed by 18th century French aristocracy. Let them eat cake, while you enjoy your boxed set of ST:TNG.
